For the last seventeen years, her husband, Jack, and son, Justin, have been Madeleine Seymour's world. Then, during Justin's wedding reception, Jack collapses. Jack needs surgery, and he insists it be performed by the doctor who perfected the procedure. But the doctor isn't reachable, and time is running out.

Dr. Rachele DuPres, plagued by memories of a deadly failure, flees America to search out her roots in her ancestral village in Provence, France. But as she tries to locate the graves of her Catholic uncles and her Jewish parents, will their roles in the Holocaust bring more angst—or the answers she so desperately seeks?

The second in a trilogy.

Don't miss the prequel, Pilgrimage, set in Italy, or the soon-to-be-released sequel, Inheritance, set in England.

CHRISTINE SUNDERLAND, also the author of Pilgrimage (the story of Madeleine's journey through the grief of losing her young daughter, Mollie), has been interested in matters of belief since she was sixteen and her father, a Protestant minister, lost his faith.

Today she is Church Schools Director for the Anglican Province of Christ the King and Vice-President of the American Church Union (Anglicanpck.org). She has edited The American Church Union Church School Series, The Anglican Confirmation Manual, and Summer Lessons. She has authored Teaching the Church's Children and seven children's novellas, the Jeanette series, published by the American Church Union.
